First Glimpse of America

The first sight of the United States was of Cape Cod lighthouse at 2 o'clock in the morning. It was followed by the Cape Ann lighthouse. At dawn the coast line was visible, and then the course was southwest over. Long Island Sound, passing above Newport and diagonally over Long Island to Long Beach and along the South Shore to the Ambrose Channel. As the ship careened over the field with the black, yellow and red service flag fluttering from the control cabin, dirigible experts, on hand to inspect it, got an opportunity to compare the ship dropped to within 100 feet of the ground, its engines suddenly stopped and in response to orders shouted in German by Dr. Eckener in the control thorities. cabin four grappling ropes were lowered and were eagerly grasped by the. ground crew spread out in V-shape to pull the vessel to earth, --Dr. Eckener, seen through a porthole, was greeted by "Hurray for Eckener!" "Hurray for Germany!" from the throngs. There was a remonstrance against the cheering, because it was said it drowned the voices of those who were giving orders for the, landing, but the crowd soon found a substitute for cheering. Hats were thrown into the air and handkerchiefs were fluttered. But there was further trouble for the guards. As soon as the control cabin suspended beneath the great bag gently touched the ground relatives and friends of the four American officers aboard and friends of members of the German' crew broke through the lines and rushed forward to grasp the hands of those who peered out of the portholes.

graduated in 1885. He was admitted to the bar three years later, and in the same year was elected as a Representative to the General Assembly. Also in that year he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention as he was in 1892, 1900 and 1994.

Following in the steps of his father he was Speaker of the Connecticut House, and in 1902 he was elected to the House of Representatives. He went to the Senate for his first term three years later, and was re-elected in '1909, 1914 and 1920.

Throughout his career in the Senate he adhered quietly but unswervingly to his beliefs, many of them classing him with the "irreconcilables" on oth er than League of Nations grounds. He was, for example, opposed to prohibition, and did not falter in that opposition even under a barrage of letters from the reformers of his native state. And by conviction he, was opposed to woman suffrage and voted against it. On that issue a chorus of protest went up from his political friends. He was told it would wreck his chances. He was threatened by women leaders and cajoled by masculine politicians, who prided themselves on an ability to see which way the wind was blowing. But the convictions of Senator Brandegee, "who leaned over back-

He was told he would lose in Connecticut in 1920. The women would knife him, he was informed. He was imperilling his future and that of his party in the state, but he was re-electd overwhelmingly.

By far the Senator's most prominent part in recent years was played in the treaty fight.

During the last few years the senior Senator from Connecticut visibly failed in activity and took little part on the floor. His mind, however, never lost its place in the guiding circles of the party.
